It is done by flooding the network or server with useless and invalid authentication requests which eventually brings the whole network down, resulting in no connectivity. As a result of this, users are prevented from using a service. Description: A DoS attack is initiated by sending needless and superfluous messages to the server/network for authentication of requests having invalid return addresses. The server/network, when unable to locate the return address for sending authentication, waits for a long time and gets stuck before the connection closes. Upon the closure of connection, the attacker once again starts sending more messages with invalid return addresses for authentication to make the server/network undergo the complete process again. The server/network gets stuck and remains busy, causing the service interruption for other users. Unlike other security attacks, DoS attacks usually do not aim at breach of security. Rather, they are focused on making websites and services unavailable to genuine users resulting in loss of time and money. These attacks can last many days, jeopardizing the image of an organization and causing revenue loss towards compensation to users for unavailability of services at the time of an emergency. DoS attacks can be of various types depending on the outcomes. Some examples are Smurf attack, Ping flood, Ping of death, Teardrop attack, Email bomb, etc. Also, the motive of these attacks could be many, including extortion, personal rivalry, cyber warfare, business competition, etc. Although there is not much that can be done to stop these attacks, some basic prevention steps that can be taken include monitoring the traffic for abnormalities, keeping security definitions up-to-date, and being aware of the latest threats via social platforms. A woodcut from 1860, depicting the Denial of Peter, a story told in the four Gospels in the New Testament. In it, Peter denies having associated with Jesus, who is being sought by authorities. Denial, in ordinary English usage, is asserting that a statement or allegation is not true[1] (which might be accurate or inaccurate). It may also mean the refusal of a request, but this article covers denial of true factual claims. In psychology, denialism is a person's choice to deny reality as a way to avoid a psychologically uncomfortable truth. In psychoanalytic theory, denial is a defense mechanism in which a person is faced with a fact that is too uncomfortable to accept and rejects it instead, insisting that it is not true despite what may be overwhelming evidence. The concept of denial is important in twelve-step programs where the abandonment or reversal of denial that substance dependence is problematic forms the basis of the first, fourth, fifth, eighth and tenth steps. People who are exhibiting symptoms of a serious medical condition sometimes deny or ignore those symptoms because the idea of having a serious health problem is uncomfortable or disturbing. The American Heart Association cites denial as a principal reason that treatment of a heart attack is delayed.[2] Because the symptoms are so varied, and often have other potential explanations, the opportunity exists for the patient to deny the emergency, often with fatal consequences. It is common for patients to delay recommended mammograms or other tests because of a fear of cancer, even on average this worsens the long-term medical outcome.[3] Psychology Initial short-term denial can be a good thing, giving time to adjust to a painful or stressful issue. It might also be a precursor to making some sort of change in one's life. But denial can also be harmful; if denial persists and prevents a person from taking appropriate action, it's a harmful response.[4] In political and economic context Some people who are known as denialists[5] or true believers have known to be in denial of historical or scientific facts accepted by the mainstream of society or by experts, for political or economic reasons. It includes: Climate change denial Denial of evolution Historical negationism (such as Holocaust denial) HIV/AIDS denialism Modern flat Earth societies Historicity of Jesus See also Wikiquote has quotations related to: Denial Closed circle Closeted Cognitive dissonance Confirmation bias Cover-up Deniable encryption Foreclosure Lie Moral blindness Narcissistic defence sequences Non-apology apology Non-denial denial Plausible deniability Polite fiction Psychological manipulation Scotomization Self-deception Self-fulfilling prophecy Skepticism The Politics of Denial Willful blindness References ^ "denial".
